

CONTRIBUTORS

DARRIN AASE is a PhD graduate of DePaul University's Clinical-Community Psychology program. He is currently an Assistant Professor at Governors State University in University Park, Illinois, USA.

DEBORAH L. CONRAD-GARRISI, RN, PhD, LLP. Grosse Pointe Woods, MI USA. This study is part of a Dissertation completed by the first author to fulfill requirements for a Ph.D. in Educational Psychology at Wayne State University, Detroit, Michigan. She is currently working at a Partial Hospitalization Program for individuals in need of intensive outpatient treatment and as a therapist for individuals and families.

MIKE EDWARDS, Senior lecturer in social work, Department of Applied Social Sciences, University of Bedfordshire, Bedford, United Kingdom. Michael worked in mental health services in the United States and the United Kingdom, and in research and demonstration projects on disability and employment in the United States. Current research is on the determinants of workforce participation by people with disabilities and on the organization of mental health services.

JOE FERRARI is the Director of the Master of Science program in General Psychology at De Paul University in Chicago, Illinois from which he has received awards for excellence in scholarship and in public service. He has received many NIH grants to study self-run Oxford Houses, among other subjects, and is well published. In addition, Dr. Ferrari has been Editor of the Journal of Prevention & Intervention in the Community (Taylor & Francis, Publishers) since 1995.

RONALD HARVEY is a 5th year PhD student in community psychology at DePaul University; his advisor is Dr. Leonard Jason. His research focuses on the social climate of Oxford Houses, and he is writing his dissertation on factors contributing to relapse among OH residents. In 2009-2010, Mr. Harvey conducted feasibility research for creating recovery homes in Bulgaria under a U.S. Student Fulbright grant.

LEONARD JASON, Ph.D., Center for Community Research, DePaul University, has been the principal investigator of several large, National Institute of Health funded research projects on self-run Oxford Houses since the early 1990s. He is past Director of Clinical Training in psychology at DePaul University. Dr. Jason is a past president of the Division of Community Psychology and he has received various awards from the Society for Community Research and Action, both of which are sections of the American Psychological Association.

MAGNUS KARLSSON, Associate Professor of Social Work, Dept of Social Sciences, Ersta Sköndal University College, Stockholm, Sweden. He has done research and published on self-help groups in Sweden and the United States and non-profit mental health organizations. Since 2002, Karlsson has focused his research on Clubhouse activities in Sweden as well as internationally.

ROSARIO LARATTA is Senior Lecturer of Community Policy and Management at Graduate School of Governance Studies, Meiji University in Toyko, Japan. Rosario grew up in Calabria, Italy, did his graduate work at Warwick University in England; his PhD is in Sociology from Warwick University, UK. Since 2006 he has been living and working in Japan. He is widely published on comparative research on non-profit organizations especially in Japan, Italy, and the United Kingdom.

JAMES M. MANDIBERG, Ph.D., is an Assistant Professor of Management and Social Enterprise at the Columbia University School of Social Work in New York City. His disciplinary focus within social work is organizational studies; his research focuses on the economic and social development of identity communities of economically and socially excluded stigmatized populations.

YOSHIKO BOREGREN MATSUI is a PhD student in the Department of Social Work, Lund University in Sweden. After growing up in Japan, she has lived the past 18 years in Sweden. She is studying civil society organizations within the disability field. Her thesis deals with the implementation of the Clubhouse Model in Sweden and Japan.

ANNA MEEUWISSE is a professor of social work in the Department of Social Work, Lund University in Sweden. She wrote her thesis on the Fountain House Movement and has been engaged in several research projects concerning Swedish civil society organizations and trans-national social movements in a changing welfare state.

JENNIFER MORTENSEN is a 4th year PhD student in the Ecological-Community program at Michigan State University; her advisor is Penny Foster-Fishman. She received her Bachelor of Science degree in Psychology from DePaul University, Chicago, Illinois in 2006.

FRANCESCA PERNICE-DUCA, PhD, is Associate Professor and Director of the Counseling Psychology Master of Arts program at Wayne State University in the College of Education, Detroit, Michigan. She has been working with Clubhouses for the last 13 years and has published several articles about these recovery oriented treatment environments.