

CONTRIBUTORS

HEATHER RENEE CHATEAUVERT, MA, is a Doctoral student in the Educational Psychology program at Wayne State University, Detroit, Michigan. She has worked closely with mental health consumers in a clinical setting in a community mental health environment in the United States. She has also been the research coordinator for studies involving the role of clubhouse in the lives of consumers and their families.

JEANNINE COREIL, PhD, MA, is a Professor in the Department of Community and Family Health, College of Public Health, at the University of South Florida in Tampa. She is trained in medical anthropology and social-behavioral sciences. Her areas of research include infectious diseases, illness support groups, women's health, and qualitative research methods.

JAIME CORVIN, PhD, MSPH, CPH is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Global Health, College of Public Health at the University of South Florida in Tampa. Her areas of research include breast cancer, women's health, global health disparities, Latino health, and chronic disease self-management.

THOMAS K. J. CRAIG, MBBS, PhD, FRCPsych: Professor of Social Psychiatry at the Institute of Psychiatry, King's College, London and the South London and Maudsley National Health Service Foundation Trust. He qualified in medicine at the University of the West Indies and trained in psychiatry in Nottingham UK. He has researched and published on the influence of social deprivation on the onset and course of psychiatric disorder including studies of mental illness in homeless young people and other disadvantaged populations in the inner city. His clinical research activities focus on developing and evaluating community-based psychiatric services and the promotion of these solutions at a National and International level. These programmes have included the development of residential alternatives to the hospital asylum, specialised services for homeless mentally ill people, supported employment and Clubhouse programmes, and the Lambeth Early Onset (LEO) services for first episode psychosis.

KAREN DYER, MPH, MA is a doctoral student in the Department of Anthropology, College of Arts and Sciences at the University of South Florida in Tampa. Her research interests include medical anthropology, women's health and experiences of cancer survivorship.

YU-HUI LU received her MSW from Soochow University in Taiwan. She is now a PhD Candidate in the Institute of Health & Welfare Policy of National Yang Ming University, Taiwan. She is a social worker certified by the Taiwan government having passed the Senior Examination for Social Workers given by the Ministry of Examination. She is also a lecturer in courses of community-based services and Christian evangelical work at the Theological College Seminary, Taipei, Taiwan. Her research interests have been in community psychiatric rehabilitation and the development of the clubhouse model in Taiwan.

BARRY S. MARKMAN, PhD, is a Professor of Educational Psychology and of Educational Evaluation and Research at Wayne State University, Detroit, Michigan. He is also Director of the Learning and Instructional Science Doctoral Program at the University and currently teaches graduate courses in Statistics, and in Theories of Learning. His current research interests include bullying, executive functioning in AD/HD, and applied social cognitive theory.

CAROL MUNN-GIDDINGS, PhD is in Social Policy. She is Professor of Participative Inquiry and Collaborative Practice in the Faculty of Health, Social Care and Education at Anglia Ruskin University, UK. She has specialized in research related to self-help/mutual aid groups and user-led organizations. As a recipient of several regionally and nationally funded projects she trains and supports Citizen Research Groups in the fields of mental health and older person's services. She is currently the lead author on a Chapter on self-help groups for an encyclopedia on international voluntarism that is in preparation.

REBECCA NUPP, MPH, MA is a doctoral student in the Department of Anthropology, College of Arts and Sciences at the University of South Florida in Tampa. Her research interests include Latino health issues, nutrition, and migration.

TOMOFUMI OKA is Professor and the Chairperson of Master's/Doctoral Program in Social Services, Graduate School of Human Sciences, Sophia University, Tokyo, Japan. He obtained his MA in social work at Osaka City University, and his PhD in social work at Cardiff University in the UK. He has researched and written extensively about self-help groups in Japan—parents' groups whose children have chronic diseases, self-help groups for alcoholics, and survivor groups whose family member committed suicide, among other self-help groups.

FRANCESCA PERNICE-DUCA, PhD is Associate Professor and Director of the Counseling Psychology MA program in the College of Education at Wayne State University, Detroit, Michigan. She has been working with Psychosocial Clubhouses and Peer Driven Drop-In Centers for over 12 years. She has several publications and presentations involving clubhouse environments and recovery.

KIMIKO TANAKA, PhD, is assistant professor in the School of Social Work & Administrative Studies, Marywood University, Scranton, Pennsylvania, U.S.A. She attained her PhD degree in 2007 from Columbia University School of Social Work, New York City. Her research interest has been individuals and families coping with serious mental illness over the long run; her recent focus has been on the clubhouse model of psychiatric recovery.

FRANK T. Y. WANG received his MSW from Columbia University, New York City and PhD in social work from the University of Toronto, Canada. He is now Associate Professor in the Graduate Institute of Social Work, National Chengchi University, Taiwan. He has been actively involved in promoting the consumer movement in the field of mental health. He was the Chairperson for the Taiwan Association of Family Caregivers and Editor in Chief, Taiwan: Radical Quarterly in Social Science from 2009-2012.